This analysis of lost earning capacity, lost household services and post-injury medical care is based upon the statistics in Tables 1-24 and upon the following facts and assumptions.

1. Dennis Cook is a white male who was born on April 5, 1955 and who was injured on May 17, 1999. Mr. Cook is a high school graduate.

2. At the time of his injury, Mr. Cook was employed by the City of Norwood Ohio as a sweeper. Lost earning capacity is based upon Mr. Cook's his 1997 earnings, or $38,108 in 1997 dollars. Residual earning capacity does not exist based upon the vocational report of Dr. George Parsons.

3. Employer contributions to fringe benefits, such as social security, pension, and health and welfare plans, range from 26.05 to 26.41 percent of wages. These percentages are based upon actual employer contributions.

4. The impact of inflation on wages and on interest rates is offsetting; the present value of lost earning capacity can be found by computing "real" increases in wages and by discounting to present value using the "real" rate of interest. The net discount rate for these calculations is 1.80 percent annually (see Appendix I). PERS Disability Payments increases at a rate of 3.00 percent annually and is discounted by 6.22. The net discount rate for these calculations is 3.22 percent annually.

5. If it is assumed that offsets to lost earning capacity to account for PERS disability payments received by Mr. Cook are to be incorporated in this analysis, the benefits would total $37,970 in 2000 dollars annually.

6. The impact of inflation on PERS disability payments and on interest rates is offsetting; the present value of PERS disability payments can be found by computing "nominal" increases in PERS disability payments and by discounting to present value using the "nominal" rate of interest. PERS Disability Payments increase at a rate of 3.00 percent annually and are discounted to present value by 6.22 percent annually. The net discount rate for these calculations is 3.22 percent annually.

7. "Earning capacity with work-life adjustments" can be found by either computing the earning capacity each year and ending estimates at "work-life" expectancy or by reducing the earning capacity estimate for each year by a factor that considers life expectancy rates (L), work-force participation rates (P), and employment rates (@). In this analysis the latter has been used, and therefore cumulative loss columns in calculation tables become irrelevant. Losses are projected through life expectancy, but U.S. government data are already being used at every age to reduce for probabilities of death, retirement, disability, and unemployment.

8. Based upon the Cornell Study, lost household services of 13.7 hours per week are increased/decreased according to family composition and other variables. The surveyed replacement cost of lost household services is $7.67 per hour in 1999 dollars.

9. Mr. Cook has reported that he now contributes an additional 27 hours per week to medical care since the injury. The replacement cost of post-injury medical care is $7.67 per hour in 1999 dollars.

10. The impact of inflation on replacement costs and on interest rates is offsetting; the present value of lost household services can be found by computing "real" increases in replacement costs and by discounting to present value using the "real" rate of interest. The net discount rate for these calculations is 1.80 percent annually (see Appendix I).

Based upon these facts and assumptions, the present value of lost earning capacity with continuous employment is $1,600,000 (Table 7). The present value of lost earning capacity with adjustments for work-life expectancy is $836,319 (Table 14). The present value of lost household services is $149,284 (Table 17). The present value of post-injury medical care is $329,178 (Table 20). The present value of PERS Disability Payments is $882,693 (Table 23). These projections are summarized in Table 24.
